Person 1: So, what do you like to decorate with?

Person 2: Ah, cactus. It might seem cliché.

Person 1: Cactus are adored by many; it's quite evident!

Person 2: But I share a unique bond with cactus; it aligns perfectly with my personal nature.

Person 1: Really? Why is that?

Person 2: My family, however, thinks it's bad luck due to our orthodox views on Indian culture. Well, they believe the spines could give off aggressive and negative vibes. But personally, I love cactus because I can maintain it alone. It's small and handy.

Person 1: Indeed, its spines can potentially impart a sense of aggression and negativity to one's thoughts, don't you think?

Person 2: It depends on individual.

Person 1: So, why do you like cactus, and what's so special about it?

Person 2: Well, personally, I appreciate cacti because I can maintain them alone. They're small and handy, making it easy for me to care for them without assistance.

Person 1: Clever choice! How does it match your character?

Person 2: Cactus and I can handle things alone and still be happy with a blooming smile, just like its flowers.

Person 1: Ah, it sounds like poetry. Can you share more?

Person 2: We both need a little water, or love, at the same time can survive without it.

Person 1: In the next life, you should be born as a cactus, winking.

Person 2: Then, We store our care and water, and only the deserving get to access it.

Person 1: Quite the comparison! Anything more?

Person 2: Absolutely. While others need constant watering and money, we thrive where we got hurt and in sunlight. People may think my relationship is worthless and growing cactus is bad luck, but "We love to grow where we are rejected and neglected."... 🌵💛🌵
